Response to Invitation to Comment – Reducing Complexity in Reporting Financial Instruments

The Financial Accounting Standards Committee of the New York State Society of Certified Public Accountants has reviewed the Invitation to Comment and has prepared a response to the question in paragraph 22 of the document:

Question: How should the Board proceed in reducing the complexity and improving reported information about financial instruments in the near term in the United States while also facilitating convergence with IFRS? Some possibilities to consider are:

a. Are the measurement-related problems and complexities (including presentation of changes in fair value) so significant and urgent that the Board should continue to consider undertaking short-term U.S.-only projects (in addition to a longer-term joint project or projects with the IASB)?

b. Should the Board work only on joint projects with the IASB and avoid undertaking additional U.S.-only projects related to financial instruments until a determination is made about whether and when the United States will adopt IFRS?

c. Should the Board eliminate differences between IFRS and U.S. GAAP by replacing U.S. GAAP for financial instruments with IAS 39, Financial Instruments: Recognition and Measurement, and then either work with the IASB to improve IAS 39 or simply adopt any improvements the IASB chooses to adopt?

Response – We believe that option “c” is appropriate and the Board should work with the IASB to improve IAS 39. This option is more in keeping with the Norwalk Agreement and the principles of the Memorandum of Understanding between the Board and the IASB. We have consistently recommended in the past that FAS 133 and FAS 140 be reassessed in their entirety rather than through continual amendments or reissuance with the “R” designation.
